

The organization of the principal cells of the retina. Once stimulated, the rods and cones permit a neural impulse to pass through the bipolar cells to the ganglion cells, which form the optic nerve.