

Think of the hydrogen ions passing through the ATP synthase as being like water passing through a dam. Just as the water turns a turbine that generates electrical energy, the movement of hydrogen ions through ATP synthase “turns a molecular turbine” that generates ATP.