

During fertilization, a sperm cell reaches the jelly-like coating surrounding the egg (A) and releases enzymes that digest a path through the coating. The path allows the sperm cell to go farther through the coating and move toward the plasma membrane of the egg (B, C, D). After a sperm cell enters the egg, the sperm nucleus and the egg nucleus fuse, completing fertilization.